Example of a better answer:

I am interested in pharmacy and I took interest after high school after they had the career week. And there were two pharmacists that attended the event and I was really excited about what they did every day. After that, I took a part-time job in retail pharmacy where I interacted with several different pharmacists, pharmacy technicians, as well as patients. And I loved the interaction that pharmacists have with their patients, and I was able to observe how the pharmacists made a difference in their patients' lives. After that, I applied to the University of Waterloo and I am now in my second year. Extracurricular activities include the UW Pharmacy club, where I am the secretary for that club. I also acquired strong interpersonal skills through extracurriculars, when I worked at a nursing home as well as a camp counsellor when I was younger. I feel that my passion for this profession, my strong interpersonal skills and my love for science will allow me to have a positive impact on patients and in the profession.
